MONDAY MORNING, FEB. 16, 1858.

Louis Napoleon.

On the night of the 14th ult., at the door of the principal opera house in the City of Paris, a desperate but unsuccessful attempt was made upon the life of the individual above named, who has for the last six years in France worn the style and title of "the Emperor."

The implements of destruction were three hand-grenades, or bombs, of a most frightful nature, which being thrown from an upper window at the moment the Emperor's carriage drove up, exploded as they struck the pavement, with a horrid reverberation, spreading death and terror among the crowd.

The whole neighborhood was shaken as if by an earthquake; the street lamps were extinguished, and vast quantities of window glass broken.

Six individuals and as many horses were killed—the carriage from which the Emperor and his wife had but just alighted, was demolished, and fully one hundred persons were more or less injured—the atrocious monster had his hat torn in pieces, and his face slightly wounded by a splinter; but otherwise, both himself and his companion escaped uninjured.

The places whence the missiles were thrown were instantly taken in charge by the police, and the inmates arrested, together with other suspected parties, chiefly foreigners. Among them are four Italians, named Pierre, Orsini, Gorney and Ruffin, who are supposed to be the principals in the projected regicide, and who were to be tried for the outrage about the 10th inst.

The City of Paris was wild with excitement, and the feverish interest of the affair had extended to all parts of Europe. The French government press protested that the French exiles in England were implicated in the affair, and loudly demanded their banishment from that country—a demand which the ministerial journals in London seemed rather to favor.

That Louis Napoleon, with all his seeming popularity, power and grandeur, is extensively and deeply hated, is certainly and remarkably true; and, as we do, the treacherous and murderous means employed by the perfidious villain, to obtain and secure his position, we cannot plead guilty to any great amount of sympathy for him. Several hundred individuals (some accounts say as many as two thousand) were thronged by that downy his myrmidons, in the streets of Paris, as a part of the bloody programme by which he usurped the Imperialist's throne.

That Louis Napoleon, with all his seeming popularity, power and grandeur, is extensively and deeply hated, is certainly and remarkably true; and, as we do, the treacherous and murderous means employed by the perfidious villain, to obtain and secure his position, we cannot plead guilty to any great amount of sympathy for him. Several hundred individuals (some accounts say as many as two thousand) were thronged by that downy his myrmidons, in the streets of Paris, as a part of the bloody programme by which he usurped the Imperialist's throne.

This is not a wanton and criminal recklessness, which, in order to destroy even the violent monster, is ready to hazard the lives of the innocent multitude? What had been done by the miscellaneous crowd, assembled at the door of the opera house, give even a semblance of excuse for murdering these armed bombs into their midst? It is not pretended that they were in any way implicated in the crimes perpetrated by the villain Emperor; and it was contrary to reason, justice and humanity, to aim a blow at the guilty which would so involve the lives and lives of the innocent.

The Washington correspondent of the Richmond Enquirer openly boasts that the President has upbraided enough in his power to buy up votes enough to carry Louisiana through the House.

So we had already presumed. Just so it is being seen in reference to the most important projects in my slave South. And just so it will continue to be, until the people shall stop the President in that atrocious path, the approaching power.

A Yankee Trick.

We had the following letter in the columns of the New York Tribune of Friday. Our readers, who may have seen in some of our contemporaries the account of the mysterious adventures of Hon. John M. Davis of Virginia;—Low with bare hands turning up his coat tails to imitate a wren, he has been seized by the "cops" of New York, and is now in the custody of the police.
